FROM THE ARCHIVES: THE COCONUT GROVE

In the fall of 1946, Claremont College Undergraduate School for Men (now Claremont McKenna College) opened with eighty-six students. Until the completion of the new residence units on the CMC campus, students were housed in temporary, barracks-style rooms in "Big Bridges", and attended classes there, too. The room under the stage was designated a recreation room for the students. Fitted with card tables and chairs and decorated with potted palm trees, it quickly became a favorite hangout for the students who began affectionately called it the "Coconut Grove."
